After ninety-five days of SUMMER Forty-hour work weeks, summer school, trips to the beach and mission trips, students reluctantly returned to their home away from home on August 18 to find that A LOT CAN HAPPEN in three months. As the school entered its nintieth year, SPANGLER STADIUM was updated by installing lights so that night football games could be played. Enrollment reached an all-time high with 300 new FRESHMEN. A four-year SIGN LANGUAGE program meant expansion for the foreign language department. No matter where you looked, heads were turning to get a different Point of View.

Attempting to become the new "Snot Put" champion, Jonathan Owens hurls his piece of Kix through the air as Tabby Overstreet watches. The event was part of the freshmen Olympics held on the Quad during the first week of school.

Adjusting her microscope during Biology lab, Megan Curry attempts to get a better focus on her specimen. Labs provided the opportunity to see ordinary objects in different perspectives.

During the Gardner-Webb football game against Newberry on September 23, Tracy Myers, Jaya Amar and other dedicated fans brave the rain to witness the first night game under the new lights. Nothing could dampen the spirits of dedicated fans.

Taking a break from rolling the campus on the night before homecoming, Brandy Patton and Traci Dodson seem to enjoy the scene of the transformed campus. The tradition of rolling the campus at midnight produced a few hours of fun for students and days of cleaning up for maintenance workers.

Wanna know what I think?

"During my spare time, which I rarely get, I like to hang out with my crazy friends, leave campus on the weekends, meet new people, and definitely talk on the phone!"

-Jo An Salomon

"Dorm life is really fun and our hall is just like a big family; we all get together, act crazy, have big parties, and we are always there for each other!"

-Lynna Moore

"The one thing I like is the dedication of some of the teachers in helping to accomplish personal goals."

Showing their school spirit on "twin day" during homecoming week, Jackie Carpenter and Jennifer Troutman walk to a 10:00 class. Dressing different ways during homecoming provided a welcome change of pace.

Working didgently, Tim Chilton and Donald Bell attempt to transform Royster into a dog house for the Homecoming competition. Their efforts paid off as Royster was awarded one week of open visitation for winning first place.

While some were hackisacking out on the Quad, others were confined to their rooms frantically reviewing pages of Dr. Gregg's Old Testament class notes, trying to learn a second language of Spanish, French, or Greek, or attempting to figure out how $5x+6z$ could equal "y". From Freshmen Orientation until the end of Spring semester exams, people kept busy! Many students went home for the weekends, but those who remained on campus found plenty of activities to steal their time. Whether it was playing beach volleyball or cards, catching up on homework and sleep, or just hanging out with friends, students found many ways to fill up the time between Friday and Monday. Homework was not the only work that filled students' lives, there also had to be a way to earn money. While some worked on campus in work study positions, others waited tables at Uptown Cafe, checked out groceries at Ingles, or checked in movies at Video House. Any way you looked at it, life was never dull.

Ready to blow, J.J. Morris prepares to launch a Kix for the Snot-Put. This competition was just one of many for freshmen to participate in during the Olympics on the Quad.

Working diligently, Big Sister Tonya Cochran and Big Brother Kris Huffman prepare a sign for the upcoming week. Welcome Back Week was full of activities for both freshmen and returning students.

Cheering for their team, Brandy Stephens, Kristy Montgomery, and Roy Perrin celebrate a win in the Olympics on the Quad. LouAnne Gilliam, who planned the activities, hoped the Olympics would be a way for freshmen to get rid of the concept of being "cool" and just have fun being goofy.

Giving it all they have, Laura Bell and Julie Gantt show the Freshmen how to do the Bunjee Run right. The number of students that attended the Luau proved it to be very successful.

*L*iving with the parents is getting kind of rough, so one Saturday I started packing my stuff. Wake up at six, my alarm clock rings. Pack up the van we're going to Boiling Springs. I'm glad this isn't a Catholic school, with lots of nuns and lots of rules. But hey man, I can't complain. This sure beats the heck out of Tulane. Winding down or cranking up?

New faces, old friends, and great expectations greeted the students as they arrived to begin another exciting year. Obviously, moving in was first on the agenda as boxes, suitcases, and crates carried by anxious hands, quickly filled up the dorm rooms. After unpacking, students had to face the social and academic chores of settling into college life. The Student Entertainment Association helped this transition by organizing a variety of activities to ensure an eventful, yet relaxing time before the strain of classes and work began. Class registration was no problem for the few fortunate students who received "express registration," but many students, in the chaos of the LYCC, developed headaches and nausea from unforeseen schedule difficulties. While students waited in line outside the LYCC, clubs and organizations took advantage of the opportunity to introduce themselves to the student body. A highlight of the week was a CMU sponsored Dana Russell concert, which was preceded by a picnic on the Quad. This concert provided a time of fellowship and an opportunity for many students to put the upcoming year in perspective, and their focus on Christ. Classes waited right around the corner, but the week's activities helped keep the students' minds off future notes, papers, and tests. When Fall classes did start back up again, SEA made sure that students still had opportunities to meet new people and get their last tastes of summer. Welcome Back Week's provision of something for everyone- a variety show, magic show, school dance, and two concerts- gave the students a counterbalance to the stress that came with new classes.

Chad Riedlinger attempts to conquer a mound of "stuff". Roommates worked together to make their new room a home away from home.

B.J. Johnson, along with other freshmen, do their best impressions of wildlife during an activity of Welcome back Week. Activities for everyone filled up the week of August 21-September 3.

A Day in the Life...

Students found variety in daily routines

Buzz! The screech of the always dreaded alarm clocks told students that Monday brought the beginning of a new week. All over campus students slapped snooze buttons or grabbed a towel and headed for the showers.

A few students found time in the mornings to do a variety of chores, including picking up breakfast in the Cafe.

For most students, on the other hand, mornings were about rolling out of bed in time to get to class before the hour long lecture cranked up. Leaving the classroom (or the bedroom), students headed for the twelve o'clock lunch line. Finishing a salad or the usual hamburger, students retreated back to classes, work-study, or bed. After three o'clock, whether out on the quad with studies, off to practice with the team, or just taking time to relax, students took advantage of every minute outside of the classroom. Dinner brought time to socialize and to take care of a cone or two of ice cream. but when the Cafe doors closed, night life began. Students could be seen everywhere; whether in the basement of the library trying to escape from the noisy halls of the dorm

6:00PM- Danny Gouge, Ashley Burngarner, Shae Coates, and Tracy Berrong sit outside of Stroup on the quad after supper. Many students found that it was relaxing to sit on the quad with friends before they began studying or doing homework.

12:05PM- Angel Nelson and Jonathan Owens practice life saving techniques during swimming class. Learning to use a ring buoy became an important part of the class.

7:16 AM- Akihito Sakai enjoys his last few moments of sleep before rising to face a new day. Receiving a couple extra hours of sleep seemed to be a blessing to many students.

7:30 PM-After a self-defense lecture, Sabrina Hoffman practices her new techniques on the teacher. The class was a hall project of Nanney residents.

6:00 PM-Hackisacking on the Quad, Laura McCreary attempts to keep her eye on the hacky and keep it in motion. Many students spent their free time perfecting the sport.

9:02 AM-Before class starts, Linda Kim discusses an assignment with other classmates. The few minutes between classes became a time of socializing and finishing homework.

buildings, or trying to ace a serve passed by their friend on the tennis courts. As stars appeared in the sky, couples made their way out to the peaceful swings all over campus. Many students saw nights as times of socializing and visiting with friends and peers, thus the D.C.C became the host of club meetings and study groups preparing for the big test. The student body had a late bedtime, and there was always someone pulling an all-nighter. Studies, clubs, and procrastination ate up the hours of night life, and at the close of the day, students climbed into bed and set their alarms for yet another early morning.

9:35 PM-Working on a project for his Drawing I class, Kris Huffman attempts to perfect his shading techniques.

10:50 PM-OJ Dowdy and Yolanda Woods study intently together in the Nanney lobby.

11:55AM-After eating lunch in the cafeteria, Michael Mustian and Amy Willis catch up on conversation. The cafeteria provided an area to escape the confusion of daily routines.

On their way to the cafeteria, Heather Hoyle, Julie Eades, and Nicole Setzer display their different styles and tastes. Flannel shirts and long john shirts seemed to be popular for the girls.

Studying in style is a must for Matt Parker. Whether in bed or in the classroom, people could always be seen in relaxed wear.

Dressed to impress and ready for work, Krista Sheppard and Odell Peoples take a break from cramming in the library.

Outside the D.C.C., Corey Hardy and Anthony Quinn are "chillin'" on their way back from the cafeteria. Whether they wore a Fila headband, camouflage pants, or nothing in particular, students dressed their own way.

"From Tommy Hilfiger to Chic or a pair of Nike to a pair of Prokeds, the atmosphere is still the same because feeling comfortable and free is the key."

Evidence of the school's diversity and its ability to change could be plainly seen by students' choice of clothing. From Levi 501 blue jeans and white

T-shirts, to the ever-popular windsuit and flip flops, people wore it all. Students' fashion not only had much to say about the person, but also about the amount of time they had before class. Many students were cursed with an inability to wake up on time, while others made time to pick out that perfect outfit. The casual look was "in," with loose fitting clothing and natural earth tones. As men made their mark on campus fashion, some chose to express themselves by wearing two earrings in each ear. Although NIKE tennis shoes and ADIDAS sandals seemed to be everywhere, students found ways to set their own trends. With each new season came an exodus of wardrobes finding their way off of hangers or off the rack at JC Penneys. For classroom attire, a full basket of dirty clothes or an empty wallet brought out everything from camouflage to Sunday dress. No matter what, everyone planned on walking away in style.

Homecoming festivities began early with spirit week, which included theme days where students were given the chance to dress in pajamas, wear crazy ties and more. Homecoming weekend was kicked off on Friday night with the female residence halls' powder-puff football game. After the game, students were entertained with live music from Crimson Winter and Four Man Furnace. After the music, the cheerleaders led a pep rally to get everyone in the homecoming spirit. At the stroke of midnight the rolling began. Until 2:00 a.m., students and professors kept busy rolling the campus with toilet paper, using up hundreds of rolls and painting the trees with "paper snow". Decorating for the residence halls began, and lasted until the early hours of the morning. A few dorms got a head start on decorating by starting on Friday afternoon. best dorm decorations. On Saturday all the classes, clubs, and organizations showed their spirit and talent at the Homecoming parade. After the parade, the crowd moved to Spangler Stadium to view the homecoming football game against Lenoir-Rhyne. During halftime at the football game, Krista Sheppard was crowned Homecoming Queen by the 1994 queen, Tonya Poteat.

Keeping with tradition, Kim Morris and Phylis Sloan took extra care to roll the campus properly. Hundreds of rolls of toilet paper helped transform the campus.

Ambling through the fair, Stuart Greene and Emily Johnson pause long enough to taste the food and enjoy an Elephant Ear. The Cleveland County Fair was a welcomed event each year that offered the basic needs for a college student--food and fun.

Studying the stars seems to make Dr. Theado hungry. The Young Astronomers club was a welcome event for parents, as well as the children.

Entertaining the crowds at the Shelby Livermush Festival is a tough job but Tracy Curry is happy to oblige. Despite his heavy schedule as Chief of Security, Tracy found plenty of time to share his love of music with others when given the opportunity.

Showing his monstrous side, Kevin Helton gives new meaning to the word "acting." The Haunted House, sponsored by the drama club, was opened to the public in order to raise money for the club.

Out and About

Everyone took advantage of opportunities

Mac the Bulldog shares a moment of brotherhood with Burns High School students Kevin Greene and Davey Lowman. The mascots and cheerleaders served as ambassadors to the community by their performances.

“No man is an island;” neither is a college campus. Community activities added a twist of change to the hum-drum days of studying. Fall brought the Cleveland County Fair as well as the nearby Haunted Hayride. Students who missed high school football had only to turn a corner to find a high school willing to accept another fan into their midst. Nearby churches offered their food and fellowship with activities for students far away from home, as well as those who lived nearby. Taking from the community meant giving back as well. Many students, faculty, and staff found a sense of pride in contributing to another person’s successes. Chera Spicer volunteered at the local homeless shelter while Tom English, an astronomy professor, shared his knowledge with interested young people through his contributions with the Young Astronomers club. All in all, students found that community involvement gave them a new perspective to the world around them and a sense of accomplishment being able to help those in the community.

Ozzie McFarland helps open presents with several students from Crest Middle School at their Christmas party. The students were part of the ACTIVE program, which helped potential dropouts stay in school by pairing them with adult volunteers from the community.

This the Season

Students found many reasons to celebrate

Who could reach the highest? Elvin Davis, Tina Duncan, April Adair and Jennifer Kennedy took turns placing icicles on the tree. The challenge was to reach the top.

"I really enjoyed seeing all of the luminaries around campus at the Festival of lights." Krista Sheppherd

"It didn't really seem like Christmas until I got home from school. It's hard to study and be festive at the same time." Tamara Fox

On the second day of Christmas my professors gave to me, one final exam, two research papers... Several activities around campus helped remind students that the season of Christmas still existed, even in the midst of late-night studying and caffeine sprees. Activities gave students and faculty the opportunity to get involved and have fun at the same time. The Festival of Lights brought students, faculty, and the community together to celebrate. There was a time of singing and rejoicing, as well as drama, where the nativity scene gave a vision of the true meaning of Christmas. After enjoying the music of the concert choir at the Festival of Lights, everyone took a tour of the campus and enjoyed the 500 luminaries that lit the sidewalks. Students also had the opportunity to make mealtimes a little more festive by decorating the cafeteria. Between studying, many students found time to decorate their dorm rooms with strands of Christmas lights or miniature Christmas trees. December 17 seemed like Christmas Eve to most students, when their wishes came true and they got to head home for the holidays.

Helping out at registration, Gretchen Fritz aids students in making adjustments to their schedules.

Taking a romantic stroll, Dwayne Kouger and Rebecca Wood make their way to class.

Classes finally started after two days off, but then Jill Mayo and her friends had to make their way to class in the snow.

The white Stuff

3 inches of snow & delayed classes meant lots of fun

Getting tips from a knowledgeable colleague, Dr. Kevin Binfield tries to put his teaching strategies to work. The snow made it possible for students to have an extended holiday, but professors found ways to make it through the snow.

"The snow was a real blessing from God. It really allowed me to have time to get settled in as a transfer student."

-Lori Moore

"The snow was a beautiful addition to our campus. I don't get a lot of snow where I'm from, so I was excited to go out sledding." -Christie Jenkins

Spring registration would have to wait. The snow storm of 1996 covered the campus and postponed classes two days. When students arrived on Tuesday, the snow was still holding its ground and many students took advantage of having a day or two to spend in winter wonderland. They grabbed cafeteria trays, rubbermaid lids, plastic sleds from home, and road signs, and headed to the soccer field, the stadium, and numerous sledding sites off campus. Those with four wheel drive maneuvered all over the campus to prove their wheels could master the weather. Others slept through it all, only waking up from hibernation to make it to the cafeteria on time. They hurried from place to place on foot, slipping on ice and soaking their shoes. And through it all they waited, listening to the weatherman, fearing and hoping for more snow. On Thursday the LYCC came alive and students waited in the cold, rushed to different tables, and fought for their desired schedules. For students awarded Express Registration on Wednesday, Thursday was a day of preparation for the first day of class, and one last opportunity to enjoy the snow. ...Continued on page 28

Others were oblivious to the administration's mindset: "Blizzard or flood, tornado or fire, we will have class on Friday." At 7:00 p.m. Thursday night, the snow began to fall again. In two hours it had grown to full strength and beckoned students outside to enjoy their last free night with snow. Those wishing to seize the night stayed out until early morning, and Friday eight o'clock classes weeded out those who had received little sleep. Many students hurried to an 8:00 class finding a professor waiting and eager to make up for lost time, others found empty classrooms.

The bookstore's maze became a challenge as students tried to locate textbooks, but trying to find a used book was even harder.

On the Quad, Seth Townley, Barrett Gosnell and Jim Davidson perfect the art of snow sculpting.

Making their way to class, Daniel Call and Jennifer Wall make the trip a little more exciting by making snow balls.

Because the snow meant extra work for maintenance and grounds workers, Chuck Bridges found himself shoveling snow all day long.

Attempting to scrape the snow off her car, Sara Ristenbatt tries out her new scraper. The snow made travel nearly impossible for many students.

Before she could register, Erica Lipscomb had to have additional shots. LPN Kristy Capotosta found herself administering numerous injections during registration.

While playing Petonque on the Quad, Tom English, Dr. Les Brown and Dr. Barry Hambright prepare to begin a new game. The game became a Tuesday and Thursday afternoon ritual for several professors.

At the English Department Halloween party, Jason MacIntosh portrays Jake Barnes from Ernest Hemingway's The Sun Also Rises. Guests had to act out a famous literary character so that others could guess their identity.

"Petanque is a good way to relax and give a perspective on other cultures. It's also a low impact sport and good for the 'old guys'."

Dr. Les Brown

Between classes, jobs and practices, how did people unwind after a long day? While some people chose to catch a nap, others found life much more fun when they were having fun with friends. Games provided the perfect solution to those relaxation dilemmas. On Tuesday and Thursday afternoons professors could be seen on the Quad playing petanque, while someone could be found playing cards in a lobby somewhere on campus no matter what the time of day. Others chose more organized sports such as intramural teams. Intramurals were offered in almost every sport, including volleyball, football, softball and basketball. Even members of the faculty and staff were drawn into the craze. Members from the Business office participated in Powder Puff football and also Intramural basketball. HAPY and Royster sponsored the First Annual Dating Game, where participants had to interview unknown potential dates. First prize was a complimentary dinner for two at Fatz in Gaffney. Whether it was for relaxation or the thrill of competition, everyone seemed to be up for a little friendly competition every once in a while.

In the bottom of the DCC, Robert Carter, Dana Reid and friends enjoy a quick game of cards. Card games made times between classes more fun.

Pouring her heart, hands, and feet into her praise, Krista Sheppard uses interpretive dancing to lead student worship.

Opening up the morning program, Kris Huffman and Carl Cartee sing their rendition of Big Tent Revival's "Two Sets of Joneses."

On Thursday morning of Celebration Week, the crowd participates in the student led entertainment and worship songs.

The power of prayer and a campus revived

Through voice and music, Kris Huffman shares his talents in praise. Dimensions services on Tuesday and Thursday played an essential part in the week of student led revival.

"God hammered things home that needed to be done in my life, and it brought some people that normally didn't go to Christian activities."

--Jennifer Murray

"The praise songs gave me a chance to get away from everything and be still with my brothers and sisters in Christ."

--Robert Blair

Sunday night, January 28, in anticipation, expectation, and prayer, students crowded into the Dover Theater. They answered a call sent out to unite, revive, and strengthen the Christian body on campus. Students and faculty both needing time to recuperate, reunite, and refocus, turned their attention on things above the chaos and tiring routine of school. Each person came believing that God would draw the Christian body together. Resting in His presence, they praised His name with songs of worship, which immediately put their focus on God and things He had already accomplished for them. Both faculty and students, playing equal roles in the services, took time to share testimonies, words of wisdom, and thoughts of encouragement. Dr. Blackburn, Dr. Negbenabor, and Nell Griggs were among several other faculty members who were invited to speak. Many students contributed their talents through music or skits. The spiritual leadership of both faculty and students served as an instrument which inspired individuals to re-examine their lives. Thursday night personal decisions were made and the week concluded in a united act of worship through communion.

Beginnings and Endings

350 graduates prepared to start all over

The long-expected graduation date finally arrived. On Saturday, May 13, 1995, the LYCC was filled with graduates, friends, and proud family members for the eighty-eighth commencement exercises. John Miller, president of the Student Government Association, extended the welcome to everyone present, and Burdette Robinson, Campus Minister, gave the invocation and led the assembly in singing the National Anthem, and Heather Barnes, one of the graduating seniors, read Psalm 100 for the Scripture reading. Brian Teague sang "Thou Wilt Keep Him in Perfect Peace," accompanied by flutist Jennifer Carlton and pianist Kay Aycock. David Gomez, a retired Foreign Baptist missionary delivered the commencement address. Clayton King received the "Most Outstanding Male Graduate" medal, and Sabrina Barnes received the "Most Outstanding Female Graduate". Heather Barnes received the Senior Scholastic Achievement award. President Christopher White presented the charge to the 350 acclaimed graduates of the Class of 1995. Burdette Robinson led the assembly in singing the Alma Mater at the end of the program.

Stuart Herbert, Ryan Ward and Todd Wimberly capture their last minutes of college together. Pictures like these could serve as reminders of good times for years to come.

"I realized the importance of the day when I saw everyone standing in honor of the graduates. I knew my diploma was worth all of the hard work."—Chris Sloan

A 1995 graduate poses with her family after the commencement exercises. Juggling school, work and family could be difficult for students with families, but the diploma seemed to make it all worthwhile.

More than meets the Eye

Behind the overalls, under the buzz cuts, and beyond the facial expressions, dwelt the attitudes and feelings of every student, teacher, and individual on campus. First impressions often led to wrong conclusions when students went out of their way to express themselves. Everyone had to learn to look beyond appearances if they wanted to see the true identity of their friends and classmate and with such a wide range of cultures represented, it was impossible to find any two exact replicas. Clothing, words, and accents varied with students coming from as nearby as Shelby and as far away as Holland, Japan, and the British West Indies. Adjustment came as professors challenged students to look beyond a textbook to find truth. Whether they learned through extensive library research or hands-on interaction, students searched to uncover the truth through exploration, not simply by trusting tradition. Those on campus soon realized that answers did not hide behind black or white; viewpoints varied; and time invested revealed "more than meets the eye."

While attending the Cleveland County Fair, Michelle Webb tries to feed a french fry to Brandi Rogers as Janet Philbeck samples her own fries. In late September, the fair came to town and provided students with a fun and relaxing study break. Many students participated in fair activities, including the cheerleaders who took part in the Cheerleading Jamboree.

Jamming to the tune of "Surfin' USA," Brian Davis enjoys making his Fun Flicks video. Each semester the Student Entertainment Association sponsored the event. All students were given the opportunity to become stars in their own personal videos. Students could choose from over 300 songs and they could also choose the background they wanted. Costumes ranged from surfing outfits to Harley Davidson apparel.

Learning self-defense tactics is a fun way to release tension as Amanda Williams and Kim McVey show us. In September, Donny McIntyre from the Shelby Police Department taught 15 girls from Nanney Hall a two hour self-defense class. They were taught several ways to escape an unexpected attacker which gave them confidence in their ability to protect themselves.

For Julie Gantt, Natalie Beam, Heidi Gardner, LouAnn Gilliam, Emily Johnson, Matt Parker, Santiago Espinosa, and Lou Gable, being a Young Life leader is a rewarding part of their lives. These leaders go through training classes to learn how to develop friendships with high school students so they can tell them about Jesus Christ in a way they can relate to. After a semester of training, Sid Bradsher, the county-wide Young Life director helps to place leaders at Crest or Shelby High School. In the fall semester, these leaders traveled to the Young life camp, Windy Gap, with 2 bus loads of high school kids for a weekend of fun and games, as well as Bible study.

Each semester, many students take part in Susan Bell's art classes. Jodie Baughn practices her gesture drawings of a lamp in the lobby in Nanney Hall. The drawings are designed to help a student focus on the basic shape of an object rather than all the details. This exercise also helps students become more confident in using an artist's pencil since the artist must hold it differently when drawing than when writing for more control.

When students went home, each had a different view of what Home Sweet Home meant. While some went home to relax and spend time with their family, others went home to work at the family business. As co-owner of a beef farm, Stephen Gibson filled his time away from school with many farm duties. Whether it be feeding the 150 cattle, putting up a fence, delivering a calf, or simply riding the 4-wheeler, Stephen found his time on the farm fun and relaxing.

Who ever said, "you meet your best friends in college" was right! Amanda Williams and Brandy Faught met their freshman year and have been the best of friends ever since. These two buddies laugh and cry together. Students often saw these two gals enveloped in intriguing conversation on campus. Aside from being the best of friends, they shared responsibilities of Student Government, Amanda as Secretary, Brandy as Treasurer. When asked to respond on their friendship, Brandy replied, "We see eye to eye in most situations, but we still disagree." Amanda said, "Brandy and I get into some mischief-we're good at that." Both agreed that they had a strong friendship. It's true! You really do meet your life time, best friends in college.

Each person attending had the task of dressing up as a mystery literary character. All of the attendants had the opportunity to guess the characters' identity. Guessing appeared to have been just half the fun. Angela came dressed as the cow of Isaac Snopes represented by Natalie.

"I'll be your Huckleberry...". This famous line could be found in the movie Tombstone. However, in this case Robert Blair played the part of the adventurous Huck Finn. The classic tale, which most students are familiar, tells the story of a young boy trying to set a slave free. The mighty Mississippi rages, awaiting the two outcasts, Huck and Jim, to be on their way. Robert flung his pole on his back, along with his few belongings, and straw hat atop his head as on his Mississippi mission he proceeded.

At the Presidential Reception for freshman orientation, President and Mrs. White take time to greet incoming freshmen. The event was held on August 20 at the Dover Campus Center patio. The event gave new students an opportunity to meet Dr. White and also socialize and make new acquaintances.

On May 18, 1995, Jerome Scott passed away at a retreat in Boone, NC as a result of cardiac arrest. He served as Gardner-Webb vice president and Dean of Student Development. He passed away in the midst of doing what he loved the most-- planning how to make education more effective. He was a leader in the community and served on many boards, including the Shelby City Board of Education. His goal was to make education available to everyone and he encouraged people of all races to pursue education. Dean Scott wrote a poem before his death that summarizes his philosophy of life.

You Can't Outdo God

*You Might have great wealth, more than the average man,
But the power of that wealth is no comparison to God's mighty hand. You might have power, gained from the vote of man, But God rules all nations, there's nothing he can't withstand. You might have fortune and fame, be the envy of every man, But God's name, it's known throughout all lands.
You might be recognized by your fellowman, for acts of sacrifice, But God gave us His only Son, He paid the supreme price. You can't outdo God, even though you may try, You can't outdo God, His greatness we magnify.*

The way I See it

The word “academics” brought to many students’ minds images of classes, homework, studying, books, tests, failure, success, confusion, and deadlines. Although students sat in classes for twelve to eighteen hours a week in hope of obtaining a college degree, their concern during each lecture usually focused on understanding a new language or a novel idea. Students had at least one class from which they could not wait to be dismissed, and hopefully another they wished would last a little longer. Classes swallowed a majority of students’ would-be free time, and if they spent the remaining daylight catching up on life outside the classroom, many became night owls as 12:00 am transformed bedrooms into study halls filled with desperate students studying for tomorrow’s test or working on tomorrow’s paper. Tests brought anxiety, and exam week brought hours of cramming old material into tired brains, a time when nervousness became as common as waiting in line at the Cafe.

A Silent Language

This year the American Sign Language course of study, in the Foreign Language Department, has grown from a two year AA program into a four year BA program. Along with a major in Sign Language, the program also offers a minor in interpreting. The change from a two year program to a four year program enabled students to receive more linguistic experience before entering into the interpreting field, a field that is thirsting for qualified professionals. The

"I have been signing for four years now and my experiences here in the Sign Language program have been wonderful. One of the most interesting things is going out and meeting new Deaf individuals. Sign Language is a very unique and interesting language."
-Christie Jenkins

course study is in-depth, with an emphasis placed on language and social aspect of the hearing impaired. Students in the program are exposed to many truths of the Deaf Community that a qualified interpreter or worker with the Deaf must understand. More than just teaching how to communicate in signs, the pupils learn the grammar, structure, and rules of using this non-spoken foreign language, ASL. The program was modeled after the French and Spanish programs with feed back from the community and institutions with preexisting programs.

Students learning this silent language are presented with opportunities to go to numerous locations where they may practice their Sign Language and gain experience. Throughout the course of the year, Mrs. Selph, the school's only teacher of American Sign Language, allowed and encouraged her students to take their skills beyond the classroom, conducting labs and outside activities in places ranging from the Hamrick Hall steps, the Uptown Cafe, and the school cafeteria. The experience that the students receive assists them in becoming involved with hearing impaired individuals on and off campus.

Helping out their classmates, Krista Sheppard and Lisa Gore practice giving directions using non-manual markers.

During their American Sign Language lab, Vanessa Carpenter and Heather Gordon work on the essentials of Deaf culture descriptive communication.

Taking a break, Jody Phillips, Beth Ledbetter, and Tracy Chao use sign language while socializing in the LYCC.

By giving an example, Mrs. Selph helps her students practice describing objects based on their appearance.

Using his hands and non-manual markers in his facial expression, Robert Blair asks his classmates a question of clarification. Learning the vocabulary of ASL was only the beginning for these students who worked to better their skills in the different grammar, structure, and ins and outs of a language exclusively visual in nature.

Teaching to Learn, Learning to Teach

Teaching to Learn. Learning to Teach! Gardner-Webb education majors, as of April 1995, had the pleasure and pride of attending the School of Education. Gardner-Webb's School of Education resulted in the coming together of the Department of Education, Department of Health Education, Department of Psychology, and Department of Physical Education. Accreditation of the Education program and the forming of the School were simultaneous. Each accomplishment being of extreme importance to the Education program, neither were directly related. The School of Education and Dr. Dee Hunt expressed significant goals and accomplishments for the following years. Increased strength in preparation of professional educators as Theorists & Practitioners topped the chart of goals and achievement. Other goals for the school included: quality leadership and technical assistance for improvement of public education, and to review structure and governance of teacher education, making changes where ever necessary.

"How could anyone not want to teach? If you understand, if you know, and if you love a subject, how could you refrain from sharing it with others with the hope that they might develop the same love?"

Qualified, dedicated, friend to all, and teacher Dr. Dee Hunt felt it an honor to be requested to fill the position as Dean of the School of Education. When asked to express her personal feelings on the birth of her new position, Dean Hunt said she appreciated the challenge ahead and loved the chance to model learning and behavior through her position. Dean Hunt spoke of her happiness to represent such a quality team. Her dedication to the teaching profession was evident through her desire to be in the classroom.

Dean Hunt bragged that the students in the program were teachable and they made the School of Education look good.

Congratulating her colleague, Dr. Johnny Hamrick gives an affectionate smile and an affirmative hand shake to Dean Hunt.

Dr. Dee Hunt stands by as President White announces that she has been selected as the Dean of the School of Education. This was a large milestone for the Education program.

Teaching prospective teachers, Dr. Steve Dalton prepares education majors Crystal Morgan, Deanna Coggins and others for their student teaching semester.

Double Trouble? Dr. Ben Carson and Dean Hunt, two examples of supreme educators, exchanged words of wisdom at the School of Education announcement.

Taking advantage of the Administrative program in the School of Education, Donna Southerds and Janet Anthony work diligently in class. Students in this program learned how to effectively provide school administration.

Reviewing homework from Spanish class, Ivett Gutierrez conducts an afternoon lab. Lab assistants provided students a way to learn first hand.

Spreading Christmas cheer around campus, Dr. Cox's French class serenaded students and faculty with a French influence.

Spanish cards that discuss situations all students understand offers Angelica Silva another teaching method for her language lab. Language differences lessened as cultural similarities increased.

World Wide Words

Knowing a foreign language opened the door for many opportunities to communicate with people who speak a different language. The foreign language department not only equipped students with a knowledge of French, Spanish, or American Sign Language, it also supported students wishing to major or minor in the field. Learning another language often extended out of the classroom and into other settings. Assistance from exchange students offered additional learning experiences. Also, as a result of three year's teaching experience in France, Dr. Tamara Cox, the new French professor, brought French culture into the American classroom by comparing the differences in the two cultures and by studying works such as Madame Bovary, La Symphonie Pastorale, and Hernani. However, French studies were not confined to the classroom. She sponsored a French club which planned activities such as caroling at Christmas and viewing French movies. Cox also held a weekly "French table" during lunch for anyone interested in speaking the language. Students also traveled to Canada and France where immersion enhanced their skills. Three students participated in a "Total Impression" program by spending five weeks at the University of Quebec at Three Rivers, and 31 students took a trip to Paris over spring break. Dr. Bob Morgan traveled to Budapest in November to prepare to lead the trip.

Life is Art

Shakespeare once said that "all the world's a stage and men are but players on this stage." The drama class offered not only the stage to perform on but a new perspective through which to see life. Students were taught to view the plays from the playwright's point of view and also to understand the significance of the time in which the works were written.

Led by Keith Cassidy, a newcomer, the students began a journey across the ocean into modern Europe with several plays by Henrik Ibsen who was known as the Father of Modern Drama. Next, they traveled to Russia through the eyes of Anton Chekov and then to England with George Bernard Shaw in Major Barbara. Finally the students returned home to America where they studied works the of Eugene O'Neil, who was considered the Father of Modern American Drama, Tennessee Williams, and Arthur Miller among others. Another aspect of the class was to learn basic components of drama such as blocking and vocalizing. Students also learned how to improvise by playing, games, and putting actions to nursery rhymes. The basic elements of enunciation that were taught were useful in all areas of communication. The class ended their study with how this medium of art could be used for social changes through social dramas, existent drama, and contemporary dramas. By seeing the world through another viewpoint and learning the effects that drama can have on society, many students were inspired to further their experience with drama and audition for various plays produced on campus.

*"I've learned that there is more to acting than saying lines on stage. I'm also learning how not to be shy and to be more outgoing. The improvisations that we do give you a situation and make you think on your feet."--
Angela Helton*

Contemplating the meaning of life and death, Natalie Beam and Chantres Austin take on the role of two dead women in "Please, No Flowers."

Measuring for the width of the bed, Aysha Brown prepares the prop for the production of The Diary of Anne Frank. Students in the drama classes soon found that there was more to drama than acting. Many chose to work behind the scenes as well as on stage.

Expanding their Minds

Expanded to minister and educate, the Divinity School broadened its horizons by opening the World A Resource Center on January 16, 1996 -- a revolutionary event for the School of Divinity. The Center was established to help reach unreached parts of the world. These locations were cut off from Christianity by political unrest, language, or geographic boundaries; consequently, the World A missions project included educating people about those desolate places starving for the word of God. Director, Cathy Ollis, and Dr. Robert Lamb requested prayer and personal involvement for a successful ministry to unreached worlds.

"The World A Resource Center is a partnership between the Baptist State Convention of NC and Gardner-Webb's School of Divinity. World A is a term used to designate the unreached world and includes one fourth of the world's population."
Cathy Ollis

Founded in 1980, the MBA program serviced those Business majors wishing to augment their business skills and broaden their technology and managerial understanding. MBA students were required to develop a working knowledge of accounting, finance, human relations, economics, marketing, production, business law, and international business. Summer 1995 featured the first MBA commencement, and twenty-five well informed and educated business persons were introduced to the work force.

Great Opportunities for Adult Learners (GOAL) offered adults in 14 locations an opportunity to further their education. As a result of the extension of the GOAL program to the campus of Isothermal Community College, adults in Rutherford County could complete a four-year degree. The GOAL program was unique in the fact that it offered adults the opportunity to earn a Bachelor of Arts degree at night. This made it convenient for people who had full-time jobs to pursue a degree.

Do you See What I See?

The universe is full of beauty the human eye may never see...unless you are involved with Natural Sciences. During classes, students developed skills to identify qualitatively and quantitatively what they would discover in lab: cells under a microscope or the heavens through a telescope.

Trips to the landfill and Mt. Mitchell visually illustrated the damage we are incurring on our environment... 90% of the trees on Mt. Mitchell are dead or dying due to acid rain. And, students helped to repair the damage by working with the "Clean Sweep" program (similar to "Adopt-a-Highway") at the New River.

"One of the greatest things about being a Biology major is that you learn practical jokes to play on your roommate!" -- Crys Baker

On the other hand, Dr. Jones remarked that students learned a lot on the fun trips as well, "whether they like it or not." Dr. Jones took several students to the Florida Keys to dive, snorkel, and learn about salt-water environments. Over spring break, a group went to Quebec to ski. Dr. Brown organized a trip to Linville caverns to study the stalactites and stalagmites. And Dr. Burkett took a group to the Amazon River to study the tropical rain forest.

Thinking of their students' future, professors also provided opportunities for them to BE SEEN. This spring, students attended Wake Forest's Research Workshop. The Collegiate Section of the North Carolina Academy of Science was in charge of the state-wide presentations; Crys Baker and Clint Calhoun made two of the presentations for the North Carolina Academy of Science.

Students Chris Smith and Aneva Hagburg swap the lenses on the 14-inch schmidt-Cassegrain telescope in the Williams Observatory. Not only does this telescope allow viewers to see and observe the heavens, but photos like the one of the moon (lower right) can be produced for further investigation in the classroom.

Not your ordinary Classroom

At the beginning of the Spring semester, when most students looked at their schedules they saw room locations like Craig 208 or Lindsey 101. But members of Dr. Gary Chandler's Outdoor Education class found class locations to be Linville Gorge and the Appalachian Trail. The class, Physical Education 320, met twice a week to learn skills needed for backpacking, camping and repelling. As an intern, Santiago Espinosa taught what types of clothing to wear in cold weather, what brands of equipment were best and general safety rules. Each student paid a $20 participation fee and this went toward buying new packs, tents, tarps and sleeping bags. On February 9 the class put its newly acquired knowledge to work as they ventured on a 2 night, 5 mile hike in the Linville Gorge. The group hiked to Hawksbill and Sitting Bear look-outs. Since there had been 5 inches of snow on the ground in Linville, and temperatures warmed up to 60 degrees the day before the hike, students learned first-hand how to pitch tents in the mud and make the best of roughing it in soggy weather.

A field trip to Diamond Brand Outfitters in Hendersonville gave the class a chance to see what types of clothing and equipment were on the market. The class also ventured to an indoor climbing wall and experienced repelling first-hand. Dr. Phil Perrin, Professor of Music, shared his climbing and hiking experiences with the group. Dr. Perrin had hiked most of the highest mountains in the world, including Mt. Everest, and he shared his first-hand experiences.

The second hike of the year, March 15-17, took students to parts of the Appalachian Trail. Students hiked in 4 miles, set up camp and then spent the next two days hiking to different lookouts.

Explaining what types of hiking boots and clothing are best, Santiago Espinosa teaches the class some basics about staying warm and dry.

Working on getting the poles inserted in a dome tent, Rhonda Ivie and Crystal Campbell practice setting up tents in the LYCC before their backpacking trip.

On their hiking trip to the Linville Gorge, Santiago Espinosa, Tracy Chao and Matt Parker warm up by the fire. The trips gave students a chance to relax.

While setting up his tent, Derek Pomykacz tries to get a pole in the front of the tent. Practice with tents was essential for successful camping trips.

Taking a break at a lookout on the trail to Ginger Cake Mountain, Julie Gantt and Crystal Campbell admire the Linville Gorge. The class took a two night trip to the Gorge in February.

Wanna know what I think?

"Campus sports gives the student body a chance as a whole to cheer for a common cause. It's a good way to relieve the stress of the daily academic grind."

-- Daniel Woolston

"The sports program is very exciting, it's a very integral part of Gardner-Webb."

-- Chris Tate

"I think we have a good sports program; I think it all depends on the people that run the sports program on how good or bad it is. They need to make it as good as possible in order for us to compete."

-Kerryanne Rishko

Athletes, coaches, and athletic administrators had their sights set on one goal this year: raise every individual's level of performance. This determination brought changes to the athletic department with three new head coaches, and new full time positions that provided the athletes with increased aid in meeting their demand for excellence. Not only did the coaches focus on developing the body of their athletes, many also enforced a study hall for their team. However, when it came to juggling the life of classes and practice, none knew it better than the student athletes. With an average of 15 hours for classes and sometimes even more for homework, student athletes sacrificed sleep and social life for the commitments of the team. From running 12 miles in the rain, to soaking a twisted knee in a tub of freezing water, student athletes could be seen year round paying the price for their involvement. The student athletes committed everything in and out of the classroom to making themselves better at what they did for the team. All the nights of sweat and blood, the mornings of early running, and every hour of devotion paid off at the end of each season. The teams proved to themselves, the school, and their competitors that they had reached a higher level of athletic performance.

First time Ever

"Overall, the season was partly disappointing. We did end the season on a fairly positive note and despite many unfortunate circumstances, we made it to the semi-finals of the South Atlantic Conference Tournament!" commented Coach Charles. This advance into the SAC Tournament was a great success for the women's team because the women's team had never before made it out of the first round. The team consisted of thirteen returning players along with eight newcomers. Despite the great number of new faces on the team, the players worked well together and played successfully this season. The team was led by five seniors: Lori Burris, Kristen Lott, Tracy Chao, Erika Lombardo, and Kate DePasquale. This year there were many outstanding players. Kristen Lott led the team with nine goals, four assists, and is the all-time leading scorer for the women's team. She also made first team All-Tournament and second team All-Conference. Kate DePasquale was the leader in defense and made the second All-Conference team. One other outstanding player was freshman Delanie Deer who stepped into the position as the team's only goalie. Coach Charles also reflected on the season by saying, "The team played really well defensively but offensively we couldn't put the ball in the back of the net."

Being pursued by the opposing defense, Michelle Davidson clears a pass to an open teammate.

Attempting to gain control of the ball, Tracy Chao looks for a fellow teammate. The team traveled to the South Atlantic Conference Semi-finals.

Watching with anticipation, Michelle Davidson watches to see if the opposing goalie will stop her kick. Endurance became an integral part of the team's success as the players rarely stopped running up and down the field.

At the game against Catawba, goalie Brooks Derrick yells directions to fellow teammates. The team beat Catawba on October 11 during a home match.

For the second year in a row, the men's soccer team had a winning season and advanced to the South Atlantic Conference Tournament. During the regular season, the team won twelve games, lost only five, and tied once. Coach Setzer commented on the season by saying, "The team played very well throughout the season and we had the most wins we have ever had." Many of the players received conference recognition for their outstanding achievements on and off the field. Jerome Lee Yaw led the Bulldogs attack with 20 goals and more than 5 assists. Brooks Derrick was third in the country in goals against average. Edwin Odugba was awarded the 1994 South Atlantic Conference President's Award and the Scholar Athlete of the Year award for the second consecutive year. With nine new players to the team this year, the team members new and old worked well together and attained another successful record. The outlook for the next season looked hopeful because the team would only lose three seniors: Ty Richards, Richard Barclay, and Edwin Odugba and would begin with eighteen returning players. Whether he served as a first time back-up goalie, or he led the team in goals, the 1995 soccer player proved he would do whatever was needed for the sake of the team.

Runnin' for the Goal

Trying to beat Elon players to the ball, Ty Richards races down the field. The game against Elon was on September 24.

A hot and thirsty men's soccer team takes advantage of a break called by Coach Setzer. During games, any break, no matter how small, was always welcome.

Whether they were working above the net or guarding the floor, the ladies volleyball team constantly proved themselves to be worthy opponents. The 1995 season not only brought a new coach and new players, but also a new strategy.

New

Freshman standouts recruited by the athletic department included Amy Hamrick, Kelly Williams, and Danielle Johnson. Gina McGee, a junior transfer from Pasco-Hernando Community College of Florida, was also recruited. Beginning in the pre-season, the team began learning a new offensive system in order to make them a stronger contender in the conference race. Their efforts paid off in a 15-15 season overall and a 6-8 season in the conference. Another addition to the volleyball team was their participation in a spring season of competition. Six players continued playing in the spring season while the others phased out to play softball. Coach Jewel Giesy received credit for allowing her players to participate even more in the game which they love. Many other colleges already participate in the spring season but it is new for Gardner-Webb. Junior Kristie Bunn feels "the spring season has been an experience for me, but I think it will only help our future progress." Along with her love for volleyball, Coach Giesy brought an example of high scholastics from her own college experience. Giesy received her master's degree from the University of Florida after having graduated Magna Cum Laude from Furman University. The team would like to see the success of the fall season continue into the spring season, in academics as well as in sports.

During a car wash for a fundraiser, Kristie Bunn strategically aims the water to rinse off a car.

Enjoying the sunny day, Kristie Knox and Kathy Smith put some elbow grease into scrubbing a truck.

"The transition from high school to college hasn't been different; the only difference is the new people. In high school we played the same five sets."

--Kellie Williams

"Our season was a cornerstone for a tradition that is to come. This year we began earning respect from the school and the conference."

What separates cross country from all other sports? What does it mean to be a cross country runner on the 1995 team?

"Cross county is a sport of discipline, both physical and mental. How you run the race all depends on the attitude you carry with (as does life). Cross country allows you to get in your best shape, and then perform. For me, it's a spiritual experience, a fitness for the body, the mind, and the soul."

--Cindy Whitaker

"Cross Country is different because it's not a contact sport. It's more of a thinking sport, you're running against the clock. The team has a lot of talent, and as it matures we'll do better in the conference-probably win it."

--Frank Spurlock

"Running is more of a mental game rather than a physical sport. I feel its more challenging than other sports. This year's team did better than past teams, but if we stick with it we should do better in the future."

--Rachael Cash

Nothing could stop Frank Spurlock, including rain, which made for a muddy trail as he ran at the Furman Invitational in Greenville, SC on October 14. Runners faced rain, wind, and cold temperatures that made each time a bit more challenging.

Sporting their medals, Rachel Cash and Rob Stephens take a break from the action of the Carson Newman Invitational which took place on September 9. Overall, the team brought home the top 10 medals.

This year's Cross Country team entered its fourth season as a conference sport and received many awards and trophies as a team. At the Mars Hill Invitational, the men and women received third place, while the Wingate Invitation resulted with the men receiving first place and the women second. The men's team received a third place at Lenoir-Rhyne Invitational and at the SAC tournament the men received fourth place and the women sixth place. Individual accomplishments included Rachael Cash being named as an All Conference runner and Robert Stephens placing as a top runner in three of five events in the conference. The training for Cross Country was primarily done on the athletes' own time because of each runner's different activities and responsibilities outside that of being a member of the school's cross country team. The runners trained approximately forty-five minutes to an hour and a half every day, running thirteen miles every Monday, with an average of thirty miles per week. With no dual meets, there could be no win/loss record, thus the athletes performed to prove to themselves that they could achieve. When they ran, the only times they had to beat were their own from the previous week. This combination of self-committment, dedication and talent made this year's team a precedent for future teams.

Runnin' the Race

Taking time out to pose for a team shot, the group shows off their awards as winners of the Wingate Invitational on September 16.

Finishing up his run, Rob Stephens heads for the finish line. As a runner finished up their run, they gained a sense of pride by knowing that they had done their best.

The 1995 football season began when the Runnin' Bulldogs faced what Coach Fish described as their "toughest" competition: Valdosta State. The loss did not weaken the team's hope, rather, it strengthened their desire to win. This motivation showed when the Bulldogs kicked off their first home game with a 21-16 victory against Newberry College on Saturday, September 23, 1995. The new lights in Spangler Stadium provided the opportunity for night games and created an exhilarating football atmosphere for the fans. The highlight of the season was the four game winning streak.

The team's confidence was boosted by record-setting players including Speedy Mickels, who led the conference in interceptions, and punter Trey Green, who was fourth in the conference. Strongly supporting the defensive line were Seniors Jason Brewer and Jason Barnes. Phillip Keefe proved to be a leading scorer with eight touchdown completions. Even though not at full speed because of injuries, Terry Guess played a key role on the Bulldog offense. Guess, a kick return specialist, has been named an All-American, All Region, and All-SAC player.

How do you balance your academics with your athletics?

talent has caught the eye of NFL scouts.

Head Coach Woody Fish described his team as a hard-working and enthusiastic group of people who love the game of football. He also commented that the team's greatest weakness was the fact that they did not realize how much talent they possessed. One of the team's greatest assets was the fact that they didn't mind giving up personal glory to get things accomplished as a team.

"You've got the dogs on your tail. Woof! Woof!"

The Cheerleaders accomplished their goal of boosting school spirit by chanting cheers like this one. They pumped up the crowd and gave the football and basketball teams the extra push they needed to have a Bulldog victory. This group of men and women had faces full of smiles and laughter. Their smiles radiated into the hearts of the students as well as young children. They hosted a camp here for little girls whose ages ranged from 5 to 13 years old. This camp served as just a small example of the things the cheerleaders did for the community. They also performed at Aston Park

Nursing Home, Cleveland Mall, and the Cleveland County Fair. Performing was one of the things they did best, and to show-off their talent the cheerleaders had to submit a video on January 31, 1996, to the NCA, in hopes of attending the NCA's National Cheerleading Competition. The competition was a big goal and for them to get selected meant that they had the opportunity to go to Daytona Beach, Florida in April 1996, to compete with other cheerleaders all over the United States. The cheerleaders had a wonderful season and their hard work paid off. Whether up by twenty or down by one, the cheerleading squad made a difference.

The Bulldogs encountered their most exciting Basketball season with its 80% new team, new arrival coach Rick Scruggs, and awesome playing power. The team defined the word win with success driven players, and team leaders seniors Robby Turner and Donzeena Finney. The 1995-96 season proved to be a year of competitive victory. The team practiced energetic passes and in the preseason they were picked to finish 4 out of eight. Packed with awesome defensive skill Shikill Brew and

Anthony Smith proved to be an added key to successive performance. McFarland Remy, the team's manager, bragged on the team's critical moment weapons. Clutch player, Robby Turner, scored the points under the pressure of time. 6'9" Donzeena Finney rescued rebounds to score. Coach Scruggs brought his own expertise to the team and expected only the best performance from his players. A team player stressed Coach Scruggs's intense focus on individual player potential and energetic team effort. The team over all worked well together under new coaching staff and a new program. The goal for the season was to bring back the tradition started by Coach Eddie Holbrook. The Bulldogs fought with confidence to bring back the winning tradition, and the season proved to be a success, as each game brought the team a little closer to their goal.

As the Lady Bulldogs began the year, new coach Eddie McCurley predicted that the team would have a strong season. His prediction appeared to be accurate as they won ten of the first eleven contests, triumphing over Clayton State in the Cellular One Tip-Off Classic and winning the Armstrong State Invitational. When conference games began in January, the fact that the coaching staff and several of the players had begun their first year with the Lady Bulldogs became history as a group of individuals coalesced into a unified team. Seniors Delaina Adams, Kim Houser, and Ashley Goodman provided leadership on the court and excelled in the classroom. The team was also supported by juniors Tayuanee Dewberry, Misty Simmons, Stacey Farmer, and Demenda Dellinger who was recovering from a knee injury and anxious to return to the court. Transfers Susie Gaines, Lori Gordon, and Todder Clark added their expertise to the squad. Susie added quick, defensive play to the position of point guard, Lori brought strength and flexibility, and Todder contributed great ballhandling skills. Newcomers Jennifer Nufer, Katie Joseph, Sadie McLean, and Charita Dews soon became veteran Bulldogs. The Wingate game tested the team's unity and determination. During the snowstorm that crippled most of the state, the Lady Bulldogs trounced the ninth-ranked Wingate Squad with a score of 90-66. Throughout the season, the team continued to pressure their opponents. Ultimately, hard work and dedication helped the Lady Bulldogs establish a firmer position in the SAC--a conference which, according to Coach McCurley, contained "no easy games."

Waiting on the big one? Susie Gaines could play any position easily as seen in the game against Catawba which taught the team effort and perseverance.

As one of the team's best free throw shooters, Kim Houser concentrates on her next shot. Hitting each free throw became especially important as the game got closer to the end.

Surfing? Whether she caught a ball or a wave, Katie Joseph gave it her all in each game she played. Katie came into the season as an impressive Freshman player and gained a starting position before the season was over.

"Coming into the season, there was a tremendous turnaround from last year, and going out on a winning note as a Senior feels great."

--Kim Houser

"At the beginning of the season, a lot of us were apprehensive about having a new coach, but now we are confident because Coach McCurley knows a lot about the game of basketball."

Returning junior John Wall hits a cross-court winner in practice. Wall was one of the five returning players.

This year's women's tennis team consisted of an entirely new line up. Returning starter Mindy Mallard was the team leader and was accompanied by five freshmen. Because the team finished fourth place in the South Atlantic Conference in 1995, Mindy had a lot of expertise available for the new faces on the team. Recovering from wrist surgery, Mindy became the foundation piece around which the new team was built. The team faced regional power opponents such as Elon, Wingate and Presbyterian in the conference: consequently, freshmen Gina Gavini, Julie Ortiz, Lindsey Spradley, Hannah Valdez and Christy Warrick received their "baptism under fire". Aside from adjusting to college life, the freshmen players also had to adjust to a different level of intensity in college tennis. Many hours, on and off court, were devoted to improving individual and team performance as the entire team went through a rebuilding process. In addition to learning new team concepts and strategies, they had to endure long, hard workouts. The grueling twenty-two match schedule included thirteen away matches and the vans doubled as study halls, as team members tried to finish

Making

A crushing forehand lifts freshman Gina Gavini off the ground during practice. Gina was one of the five newcomers to the ladies' tennis team.

Keeping her eyes on the ball to make the perfect backhand, freshman Julie Ortiz prepares for the tough spring schedule. The collegiate level of play proved to be a learning experience for the newcomers on the team.

Lindsey Spradley prepares to hit an oncoming ball at practice. The team's numerous practices compensated for the lack of upperclassmen players.

All the pressure seems to be on junior Mindy Mallard. After struggling with a wrist injury, she used her experience on the court to lead the team through their tough season.

"This is really a learning year for our freshmen. We're going to work hard, never quit, and try to improve after every match."

The wrestlers did the same thing this year that they have always done, improve upon last year's team. New freshman and refined veterans worked to define themselves and their team.

Upperclassmen stepped up to provide leadership and example, and driven freshmen gave new flavor and tools to the team. They cut the weight to make the cut, and stepped onto the mat ready, willing, and expecting to win. As the team matured, they grew closer together, and the individuals began to treat each other like family.

The wrestlers returned this year in better shape, and ready to get serious about the season. They were ready to win, wanting to win, and believed they could win. Vinny Mehovic became the first school wrestler ever to achieve national ranking, and this year the team was among one of the top twenty-five wrestling teams in the nation. After losing their first home meet in a hard fought, down to the last match defeat to Carson-Newman, the team achieved a first time victory over Pembroke State at home. What had changed? What separated this team from previous teams? Coach Wince believed that the change had to do with the team, as a whole, maintaining a positive and focused mindset, the presence of the family atmosphere, the wrestler's experience, and their determination to put to work what they knew they had to do to win. Put plainly, the 1995-1996 team won because they believed that they, and their teammates, could win.

Win

Giving a lesson in flexibility and pain awareness, Gary Eller maintains control of his opponent while working for a pin.

Picking up a reversal and two more points, Brian Blow keeps his man in bounds and under control.

With a lock and a throw, Chris Austin picks up three back points, leaving his opponent bewildered and gasping for air. On January 17, Chris' win was just one among many that led to the team's first win over Pembroke State University.

At 167 pounds, Rich Cox tries to pick up back points using leverage and strength to turn his man with a half nelson. Even as a Freshman, Rich proved to be a strong asset to the team.

At home in overtime, riding his man and staying in position, Vinny Mehovic keeps control of, and defeats a nationally ranked Pembroke wrestler.

Why do you play baseball and what is especially unique about this year's team?

"[Baseball]'s an individual sport; everyone has their own unique talents. You must depend on each other, and that brings team unity. This year we are determined. We want to prove to everyone that we can do it. That's why we go out everyday and bust our butts."

--Josh Green

"This year's team is better than average with more freshman, character, discipline and talent. Baseball is separate from any other sport in that it takes spontaneous heroism."

Trying to catch the runner too far off the bag, Lee Hill and second baseman work for the third out.

Using his abilities as a southpaw pitcher, Chris Emory releases a pitch. Strong pitchers were one of the keys to the team's success.

Determination to improve, to overcome the many obstacles, including the loss of some key players, drove the practices and disciplines of the Spring 1996 men's baseball team. Coach Miller assured the fans that although they had lost "some good players," they were "hoping that the players that [they] recruited" would step forward. The new players were backed by veteran players like Jason McQuiniff (the team's MVP who batted .344, with 3, homeruns, and 42 R.B.I.s) and Walt Moser (who batted .320, and set a school record of 16 doubles) who were both back for action this coming season.

The team, determined to make an impact in the conference, focused on strengthening themselves in differing areas of the game. Coach Miller believed that the team had to "emphasize pitching, defense, and timely hitting. When you have all three," Miller said, "you will win. When you have only two, you have a chance of winning, and with only one [of these characteristics] our chances for victory are slim." The men's baseball team had a competitive season of fifty-three games, twenty-one of them in the conference. Playing with a commonality of determination and motivation, the 1995-1996 men's baseball team bettered their previous season and set a higher standard for future teams.

Crack of the Bat

Discussing the pitching strategy, the catcher, Lee Hill and coach Clyde Miller have a short discussion on the mound.

After rounding second base, John Hill tests his speed in an attempt to make it to third base before his opponent.

Preparing to launch a ball toward homeplate, Emily Pecoul sets her stance and her facial expressions for the pitch. Despite all outside pressures, each player was expected to concentrate on an error-free game.

Throwing from the back of the field, Crystal Morgan hammers a ball in for the cut-off.

With bat in hand, she strides up to the plate, taps the dirt off her shoes and with her might, she grips the bat. The wind ... the pitch...and WHACK! Another game underway and another hope for victory. "A lot of people were against us and didn't think we'd do well," said Megan Curry, "I think we had fun and that's what makes a good season--not how many wins you have." Through hard work and determination, the girls strived to maintain their train of thought in their quest to create champions. Most days they could be seen practicing pitching, fielding, and batting in the field, always preparing for upcoming games and tournaments. "Our tournament in Panama City, Florida was awesome," commented Curry, "We had so much fun and got closer. Tournaments seem to build teamwork and this one did." With strong pitching, a sturdy defense, clutch hitting and a positive attitude, this team sought to make a name for themselves in the conference. They wanted to be respected by their opponents, a goal which was fulfilled by the end of the season. The women's softball team has always been dedicated to excellence and unity and the same remains for the upcoming season. The 1996 season is looking optimistic with new players and returning players to lead them on to victory. A constant winning attitude separates this team from others.

Ladies Up to Bat

Tonia Ballard responds with an attitude of "no guts, no glory" as Ann Braylo, an athletic trainer, cleans a wound before a game.

Preparing herself for the inning ahead, Megan Curry catches a practice throw. Megan, as well as her teammates, understood the importance of hard practice.

Following through with his shot, Chad McAllister is sure not to take his eye off the ball. Many days of practice helped the team develop their strengths on the course.

Listening attentively to Coach McCurley, Jason Winn, Jeremy Walker and Ben Kitz make sure they get all the details for their next tournament. Unlike other sports, the golf team missed several days of classes in a row to go to tournaments.

Sizing up the hole, Josh Lail concentrates on getting the right club. Depending on the distance of the hole, different irons and woods were used.

On the greens and in the fairways, the men's golf team spent countless hours off campus working to better their scores and lower their numbers. When it came to playing golf, Coach McCurley said the two most important ideas to keep in mind revolved around the concept of team unity and hard, regular practice on a daily basis. Unlike most school athletic programs, these athletes could not practice on school grounds. Each day of the week they could be found at Riverbend Golf Course, preparing for the tournaments they played in on the weekends. Playing in both the fall and spring semesters, Stephen Gibson and Benji Kitts, the newest members of the team for the 1995-96 season, joined returning members Sam Dawson, Chad McAllister, Chad Shumate, Jeremy Walker and Jason Winn. The team could be found all over the South-Eastern United States, playing in tournaments in the Carolinas, Virginia, and Georgia. Forced to perform away from home, with no home crowd support, these men spent many days traveling. On the road, at the practice tee, or in the fairway, the team found that they relied on each other to keep control of every swing, put, and decision that faced them. These were tools they needed in order to perform well in their many tournaments throughout the fall and spring semesters.

Staying up to Par

Keeping his eye on the ball, Sam Dawson takes his tee-off shot. This shot was crucial in getting it close enough to the hole to one-put it and get a birdie.

Analyzing the lie of his ball, Ben Kittz seems amused. Golfers many times found themselves fishing balls out of ponds or digging them out of bushes.

What do you see as the purpose or motive behind the existence of athletic trainers? What is an athletic trainers job?

"We help in the prevention of athletic injuries. We also provide proper care and rehabilitation programs for each individual athlete. Our rehabilitation programs are designed for each specific athlete." --Dena Spangler, S.A.T.

"Athletic Trainers provide the link between athletics and medicine. We work in conjunction with all areas of physicians to insure a safe return to athletic competition for our athletes." --Jeremy Brackett

During football practice, Kevin Porter is evaluating Chris James' shoulder for a possible injury. Each Athletic Trainer had to know how to evaluate injuries of all types.

After football practice, Ann Braylo and Mary Swofford are responsible for sanitizing the dehydration equipment. Sanitation was a concern and responsibility of each Athletic Trainer.

At a women's soccer match, Misty Simmons, Andy Holmes and Tami Mullinax assessed Suzie Christofferson after she was injured. Athletic Trainers were the first on the scene when an athlete got hurt.

Striving for prevention, care, and rehabilitation, the Athletic Trainers put in endless hours everyday to take care of the school's 14 sports. Unlike other school sports, Athletic Trainers never had a season off. Working between the hours of 1:00pm and 6:00pm, Student Athletic Trainers (SAT) stayed busy trying to fulfill their 1,500 Internship hours that were required by the NATA to take the Athletic Training Certification Exam. From taping ankles and wrapping wrists, to setting up the Intellect 900 and performing ultrasound, these students provided a valuable service for the school's athletes. These students did not stay in the training room, they were also on the field covering each sport's practices and games. Under the supervision of Mr. Kevin T. Jones, each student was assigned a sport and became available whenever the athlete needed them. SAT's were responsible for supervising competitions, serving as dehydration technicians, and evaluating and assessing injuries. They could also be seen stretching athletes and cleaning wounds. At the end of the day, they provided every coach with an injury report which explained each athlete's condition. On and off the field, court, mat, or playing ground, the coaches could always be assured that their athletes were well taken care of, and received the utmost attention.

Ready to Respond

In the training room, Dena Spangler performs an ultrasound on Mike Dye's shoulder. Ultrasound was one of several therapeutic modalities that athletic trainers used to heal athletes.

Before football practice, Eric "KicK" Duggins tapes a football player's ankle. Athletic Trainers went through more than 40 cases of tape in football season alone.

Variety in interests and devotions produced a campus filled with many sources from which to taste the different flavors of this year's student body. Whether traveling to Charlotte to be seen in a Whoopi Goldberg movie, or just taking a trip to a haunted house, different clubs provided students with a chance to do things that helped relieve class stress. Clubs and organizations joined forces to provide students with opportunities to make a difference on the campus and the community. These activities brought several new challenges and experiences to the lives of all those who committed themselves to their club's cause. The month of October witnessed a massive campus transformation, as the work of SGA, SEA and several other clubs brought exciting new activities, faithful traditions, and students of the past and present to a Bulldog Bonanza, Homecoming 1995. Each club, no matter how different, provided a chance for people to discover common interests in a new acquaintance and strengthen bonds between old friends.

Making the Grade

There were numerous clubs on campus, but there was only one specifically for English majors and minors. With the help of a new advisor, Matt Theado, Sigma Tau Delta increased its membership and its activities. The group toured Carl Sandburg's home at Flat Rock, sponsored a car wash and had meetings twice a month. Alpha Chi and the Honors Program were two other clubs that were designed for those who excelled academically. Alpha Chi required students to have a cumulative GPA of 3.5 while the Honors Program required that students take fifteen hours of honors classes and also present a senior thesis. Members of the Sherry Grigg and Sabrina Hoffman work diligently on Sigma Tau Delta's homecoming banner which placed third in the banner contest at Homecoming.

Honors Program also contributed much of their time to volunteering many hours in community service projects. One of these programs was the ACTIVE program at Crest Middle School. Honors Program students were paired with a middle school student for an entire school year. This project included weekly visits with the children, cookouts and a Christmas party. This project allowed Honors students to be role models to younger children and also give something back to the community. Each organization hoped that they could make a difference in the community and the classroom.

A Campus with culture

They saw diversity in culture, origin and age, and by reaching out to communities as close as Shelby and as far away as Japan, students in the Student North Carolina Association of Educators (SNCAE), the World Trade Resource Club, and the International Club brought diversity to the student body.

SNCAE enabled students to discover the professional aspects of their educational field. Students had the opportunity to visit various schools in the area, and observed the community of classrooms.

"International Club is a good opportunity to learn about different people from different places. We are welcoming everybody at G.W.U. to participate in the life and activities of our club."

Being a member of the WTRC was an unique experience it was one of only 10 universities in the U.S. to have this organization. The WTRC hosted the High School Business Symposium and several conferences under the leadership of Dr. Negbegnebor.

From places ranging from Russia to France, students gathered in the Int'l Club to bring their cultural differences together. They enjoyed learning more about where their friends were from and the differences between each country.

At this year's Education Fair, Julie Blanton considers which materials and ideas she would like to present in the classroom. This year's education fair provided the chance for people to look at the different works produced by students in SNCAE.

Hands and Voices

The word chorus conjures up many images: from singers raising their voices together in praise, to students who sing songs of worship with their hands. Gardner-Webb had a performing group to suit almost anyone's taste: Chorale, Show Choir, and Joyful Hands.

In the traditional sense, the members of the Chorale joyfully expressed themselves solely through song. Together they lifted their voices as one mighty instrument.

Show choir not only used song, but also dramatic movements in order to perform. They made use of make-up and bright costumes so the audience could hear as well as visualize the idea they were trying to relay. Every song they performed had been choreographed and perfected with hours of practice.

"Chorale is a group that uses their talents in singing while incorporating the excitement of performance."

Joyful Hands did not rely on vocal skills but their skill and knowledge of American Sign Language to allow Deaf and Hard of Hearing persons to become active participants in song.

All these organizations added their own individual flair and style to make each organization unique, bringing enjoyment and encouragement to all for whom they performed.

Music, Music Everywhere

Exploding into uncontrollable "Louie Louie" in the LYCC, entertaining the audience at the Festival of Lights concert, or singing and swaying in the excitement of an old gospel song, the school's musical talents saturated campus life. Serving as a catalyst for the dances and cheers of the sports fans, the Pep Band proved itself to be as faithful to all the home football and basketball games as the teams themselves. In a more formal manner, the Concert Choir performed for various audiences on and off campus. The Concert Choir also traveled

"The Gospel Choir inspires us to have faith so that we can go on from day to day. [It] gives us courage to know that anything is possible as long as we keep God first in our daily lives."

-Yolanda Woods

to several states to perform in churches during their spring tour at Spring Break. With tamed excitement and controlled energy, the Gospel Choir made evident their love for music. The Gospel Choir prided themselves in being able to give ordinary church songs new meaning and life. The Gospel Choir practiced one day a week and they also performed at functions around campus and in area churches. It did not take long for students to see different people had different styles of music.

Strengthening the Faith

Students who wished to be encouraged and strengthened in their faith had many different groups which they could attend. Groups that founded themselves on the principals of the Christian faith. Three of these groups, the Baptist Student Union (BSU), the Fellowship of Christian Athletes (FCA), and the Christian Ministry Association (CMA), gathered a variety of students from across the campus. Comprised of students who want to get closer to God, the Baptist Student Union provided opportunities to work in nearby churches as well as local shelters and prisons. In addition, BSU offerred students a chance to socialize, sharing experience and testimony at weekly meetings. Like BSU, FCA provides for interaction between students, coaches, and anyone wishing to join. A new addition to the group of Christian organizations, CMA, challenged students intellectually and spiritually. Members, primarily Religious Studies majors, took part in discussions ranging from missions to current issues related to the Bible. CMA's newsletter includes information on local presentations that would enhance educational and spiritual experiences of its members.

Gathering around the flagpole, students meet to pray and worship. "See You At the Flagpole" is an annual event for students all over the country in elementary schools, middle schools, high schools and colleges.

FOCUSed on Faith

In Campus Ministries United students were able to give back what they had received through organizations such as FOCUS, the Student Worship Committee, and Young Life. FOCUS ranked as one of the largest organizations on campus with a membership of over a hundred participants. At the beginning of the year, FOCUS members traveled to Ridgecrest for a weekend of training for ministry teams which served as preachers, musicians, teachers, and recreation leaders in almost for 40 local churches. Members of the Student Worship Committee provided unifying worship experiences for the campus through the Wednesday Celebration Night which incorporated music, speakers, prayer, and special services for faculty and students. SWC also led the singing during Celebration Week. Those involved with Young Life built relationships with high school students and told them about Jesus in ways that related to them. In the fall YL accompanied the high school members on a trek to Windy Gap. CMU also helped sponsor Summer Missions, a statewide organization, and applied for jobs offered by regional churches, the Southern Baptist State Convention, or the state BSU program.

Although flipping burgers wasn't part of the official training, Kerry Traynum cooks supper during his mission in England. Summer Missions had its largest number of participants in ten years.

Working for Reform

1995/96 went down in history as the year of landmark student government. Focused on reform, leadership, guidance, and Christian direction, student elected representatives held senate and Student Government positions; also, the junior class elected its faithful leaders. As a way to better the university, committees were developed to address every aspect of college life. These committees included parking, visitation, and food and they were required to report recent findings and accomplishments at each meeting.

Each week the executive council met to discuss issues of specific interest for the University. Discussions included reevaluation of visitation policy, homecoming, Festival of Lights, Alcohol Awareness Week, Volunteer Corps, and many others. Student Government made sure that each event was successfully conducted.

When asked about her involvement in the Student Government, Secretary Amanda Williams summed up the attitude of those on SGA: "If students want change, they must get involved. It may take one person to have an idea, but many to accomplish it. Change just doesn't happen, you have to be willing to work for it."

"Being involved in student government is a great way to stay informed of changes and upcoming events on campus."

Law and Order

The student government consisted of students who wanted to be involved in the college experience of all students at Gardner-Webb. It was a microcosm of the democracy in America, with a scaled down purpose. It was a government of the students, by the students, and for the students that strived to improve the quality of student life on campus.

Freshmen officers listened for feedback from the freshman class and discussed ways to implement new ideas for them. The Sophomore officers wanted to make sure that things were running smoothly for the sophomores.

Thrasher, and BJ Johnson took time out of their busy schedules for selling donuts door-to-door. The money they raised went to the freshman class.

Both freshman and sophomore class officers actively participated in the 1996 Homecoming festivities.

Officers were also involved in improving the community. Freshman officers pitched in to help with the Adopt-a-Highway Program by cleaning up the Freshmen's stretch of highway that extended from the stop light at GWU to the Broad River bridge.

Waving to spectators at the Homecoming parade, members of the Freshman class show off their float. The Freshman class was active in many facets of campus life.

Looking over the agenda for the next Freshman class meeting, BJ Johnson, Tonya Thrasher, Brooke Cody and Amanda Keene discuss future plans.

Taking time to care

Keeping with the motto, "People Who Care," Resident Advisers, Residence Hall Association and the Commuter Club made sure that students both on and off campus were taken care of at their home away from home.

The job of an R.A. was never ending. Both day and night, on-duty and off, R.A.'s were responsible for hall programs, weekly reports, patrol, desk duty, and even handling arguments between roommates. Although it was the most time consuming work study, it was also the most eventful as different situations arose everyday.

Keeping students occupied and helping them interact with other dorms was the main focus of RHA. From Powder Puff and the Womanless Beauty Pageant to Bulldog fans and cow bells, RHA stayed busy throughout the year spicing up the lives of students.

Being a commuter made it hard to get involved on campus, so the Commuter Club gave students this opportunity. The CC gave students the chance to get to know others better and become informed of events on campus. Every Thursday area churches sponsored a commuter lunch which gave everyone a relaxing break and time to socialize.

"Being an RA has taught me a lot. I've learned a lot about assertiveness and how to handle confrontations."
Aime Gouge

Student Admissions Associate Brandi Rogers gives a tour of the campus to a Presidential Scholar interviewee. SAA's also had to work every week in the Admissions office.

Bridging the Gap

Striving to foster alumni involvement in University affairs, the Student Alumni Council attended a national convention at Cincinnati University to get new ideas and network with other organizations. In addition to hosting a dinner for alumni and faculty, SAC sponsored a "Great Books Give-away" to raise money for alumni affairs and a "Sun-Drop-In" to give students a break from study while they listened to Gary Doggen's guitar accompaniment.

Student Admissions Associates, recommended by their professors to help draw in potential students, shared their university experiences on VIP days and assisted with tours on Presidential Scholar days. Associates conducted tours of dorms, classrooms, the library, and the gym. In addition, they introduced prospective students to professors and escorted them to sports events.

Student Admissions Associates were also required to work one hour per week in the Admissions Office. While SAC reached out to former students and SAA reached out to prospective students, both groups strived to make the school the best it could be.

Giving their interpretation of "Bulldog Bonaza," Alpha Psi Omega members Dave Hawes, Carrie Cranford, Nikki Flynn and Chantres Austin, put their theatrical knowledge to use.

Let us Entertain you

With the phrase "Let me Entertain You" ringing through their minds, the members of the Student Entertainment Association and Alpha Psi Omega went to great lengths to keep the student body entertained. SEA brought in various activities such as Fun Flicks and a Virtual Reality program, as well as some of the hottest names in Christian music such as Benjamin, Jimi Ray, Geoff Moore and the Distance, and Big Tent Revival. While SEA kept students busy with concerts and various other programs, Alpha Psi Omega, the drama honor society, opened the doors to the theater with their first production of the year, The One Acts. Most students simply sat back and enjoyed the production, but a few dared to step out of their comfort zone and participate in the productions. In the spring, the campus was drawn into the world of a Jewish family in hiding during World War II when a stirring performance of The Diary of Anne Frank was given. The Presidential Associates served as hosts of the president's guests, making them more comfortable at games and board meetings. Those in the entertainment business found a variety of activities to keep everyone busy.

"I think it's a very enjoyable thing for the campus. It gives us a good break."--Kevin Helton Rolling along the street in their "doghouse," SEA member Jennifer Kennedy and GWU graduate Wendy Davidson enjoyed the warm day and the parade. SEA members helped organize many other activities for Homecoming Week.

Putting it on paper

Week by week and year by year, the student publications' staffs of Reflections, The Pilot, and The Web kept constant records of what went on at school, and proved that the students did not fear making their works and words known to the public. Trying to bring out the writers at school, the Reflections staff published an annual collection of student literary works and sponsored monthly poetry readings where students had the chance to share their writings with other individuals. Publicizing the affairs of the entire campus, fell on the shoulders of two other student publishing committees, The Pilot and The Web. The staff of The Pilot, the school's newspaper, bimonthly kept up with the major occurrences and changes that concerned the student body; and The Web, the school's yearbook, staff covered the wide range of student life and activity. All three of these staffs consisted of students whose diligence proved they had the courage and motivation to put their own words and works on paper; thus leaving behind a glimpse of their year for future readers.

Staying focused, "J." Hemphill of The Web staff works on drafting copy for his assigned spread. Staff members who wished to meet deadlines had to be focused and committed.

Here's to Your Health

Physical Education majors and Nursing students who wanted to prepare for entrance into their professional field found help and support from two specialized clubs: PEHEM (Physical Education and Health Education Majors) and the SNA (Student Nurses Association). Both of these clubs, founded on the principle of maintaining and restoring health, helped their students begin to understand their profession in a more clear light.

PEHEM helped students pursuing a career in Physical Education. Through the club, the students were given the opportunity to gain hands-on knowledge. PEHEM kept the students up to date on the latest ways of teaching and coaching and provided opportunities for students to teach and observe at numerous schools throughout the surrounding counties.

The SNA provided similar professional services to the nursing students. The SNA offered students opportunities to learn about issues within their field, such as job outlook and nursing roles. Like PEHEM, the SNA was concerned with helping students focused on health issues in order to prepare for their careers.

Practicing putting up an IV bag, SNA members Teresa Banks and Kristy Koonce rely on teamwork. SNA allowed nursing majors the opportunity to explore many fields of medicine.

Education. Your Most Valuable Asset For The Future.

Stick with school. The world is counting on you for a richer tomorrow.

BB&T

Member FDIC.

What's the Point?

When the year started, nothing was out of the ordinary. The usual 15 hours of classes, 10 hours of work study, 500 research papers and 67 novels to read. The same professors. The usual assignments. SAME old SAME old. Then, out of the blue, administration announced what was called the Capital Campaign, which turned out to be the biggest thing in the school's 90 year history. $20 million would be raised to move the campus into the future. The money would be used for Internet, E-Mail, building renovations and a lot more. The bicycle trials for the Olympics in Atlanta would be held on campus in June. By the end of the year everyone was looking around to see what would happen next. It was anybody's guess.

In the gazebo at the rose garden, Matt Norman and Kevin Burton practice on their guitars. Students often found remote places around campus to relax and spend time with friends.

At a Student Alumni Council get together, Leslie Starr and Janet Jones enjoy a little cake. Clubs and organizations gave students a chance to get involved and actively participate in campus life.

Before one of his classes, a student finishes up his last bit of homework at Lake Hollifield. Warm weather often drew students outside and procrastination became a word in everyone's vocabulary.

Between classes, a student takes time out to feed the ducks and skip rocks at Lake Hollifield. The lake provided students with a walking trail, several swings, and a place to hang out with friends, relax and enjoy the scenery.

Before Freshman Orientation in August, EJ Dolce ties balloons in front of the Security office. Big Brothers and Big Sisters stood at information areas, which were designated by balloons, and offered information to new students.

Working in the pottery studio in Craig, Stephanie Theado demonstrates certain techniques for her students. Students had the opportunity to take Pottery as part of an Art major.

Colophon

The WEB staff selected Point of View as the theme in the 1996 WEB yearbook publication in April, 1995. Trim size was 9 x 12 and press run was 1250.

The full color cover was designed by Herff Jones Creative Art Services with the assistance of the WEB staff. A white lithox base material was used and a gold ink was added to the full color application. Endsheets were printed on a cream Colortext stock with black and scarlet inks applied. A 110# high gloss Allegiance paper stock was used in the first signature. The remainder of the book was printed on an 80 lb. Bordeaux gloss enamel.

Body and caption copy used a Times Roman type font. Headline fonts varied throughout the book. Type was set by the WEB staff using a Macintosh IIVX computer and Pagemaker 5.0.

The 1995 WEB was recognized as a Silver Medalist publication by Columbia Scholastic Press Association in New York and was selected by Herff Jones Yearbooks as a regional sample publication.
